

Acknowledgements

This work is dedicated to my mother, whose pride in my achievement means so much to me, and whose life was and is so different to mine.

I wish to acknowledge the supportive challenge of my supervisor Judi Marshall, who encouraged me to bring myself more fully into my inquiry. I thank her and members of my CARPP inquiry group, the wider CARPP community and Peter Reason for helping to co-create and resource an environment within which to develop.

Throughout my inquiry I was sustained and encouraged by my friends, family and colleagues. I wish to acknowledge the many conversations from which I drew inspiration and material and to thank them for their interest, support and encouragement throughout my inquiry. In particular I thank Anne Scott, Elizabeth Sclater and John Southgate for conceptual exchange and feedback on draft material; Jane Grant and Siobhan Rearden for research support; Gina Barker, Helen Brown, Wendy Clark, Carole FurnivalL Michelle Guimarin, Lynne Harne, Frances Heywood, Ruth Hayden, Steve Mendel, Marion Scott, Josephine Zara and Darja Zavirsek for their sustaining friendship throughout.

Finally I acknowledge the political commitment and scholarship of feminist activists and researchers. This inquiry is intended as a contribution to this body of research and practice in order to support women's struggle for social justice and equality.
